Post-Viewing Discussion Prompts:

Was there anything in this film that you were surprised to learn?

Did this film make you feel as though there are options for you to help in your own neighborhoods and communities?

In your opinion, what was the most impactful story or highlight in this film and why?

Can you think of a time when you or someone you know had difficulty with food access or felt food insecure? How did it make you feel?

What resources do you have in your own community that help combat food insecurity and improve food access? What do they do specifically?

How well do you feel your community addresses food access issues? If you feel it needs improvement, why? What do you think should be done differently?

What role do the humanities and conversations like these play in helping us better think about the complexities and future of food security and access for all?

What can be done to better educate others on these issues?

Consider This!

As you watch the film, think of how some of the ideas presented might fit in your community. How do you see yourself getting involved? What stands out most to you?
